

Tips for Hiring a Roof Snow Removal Company

1. Experience in Snow Removal

You want to hire contractors who aren't just your average plowing service. Instead, make sure the company you pick specializes in roof snow removal, not just general snow plowing. That's because the techniques for safely clearing snow from a roof are very different from those used for driveways or sidewalks.

2. Proper Equipment

The best contractors will be equipped with the right tools for the job—not ice picks but tools without sharp edges. Using the wrong equipment can easily damage your roof or lead to serious injury. Proper tools and techniques are integral to protecting both the roof and the person clearing it.

3. Insurance and Liability Coverage

The roof snow removal company should be insured with proper liability coverage in case something goes wrong, like damaging your roof or property in the process of clearing snow or ice. Whatever it is, residential and commercial roof snow removal is a risky business, so make sure the company will cover any mishaps.

4. Safety Protocols

Your roof in winter is a slippery slope—literally. Safety is the main reason to call in the pros. Climbing onto a slippery, snow-covered roof without training is a recipe for disaster. You can help make sure that doesn't happen on your property by asking the companies you're considering about their safety procedures to protect workers and prevent accidents.

5. Reputation and Reviews

Reading reviews can help you make sure the company has a solid reputation for reliability and quality service. If they're proud of their work, they'll probably be happy to share testimonials from satisfied customers.
